

Step 1

Finding more people like you

To make Airplot a diverse community that spans the country we need to go beyond our existing supporters. We need you to start talking to everyone you know and asking them to help you (and us) out. We'd like it to be fun, creative, really quirky and you can start where you're most comfortable.

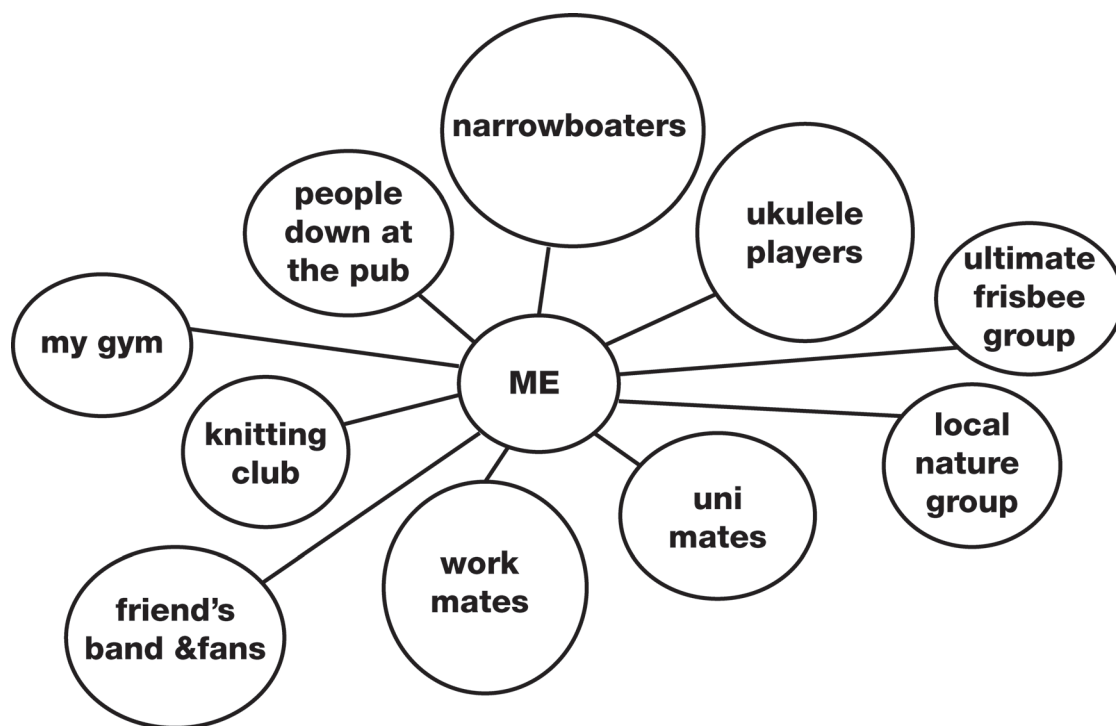

Why me? Because you're interesting. To be honest you're unique and there's something special about you, and that's what we like about you. You've got hidden talents and interests and we need you to use them.

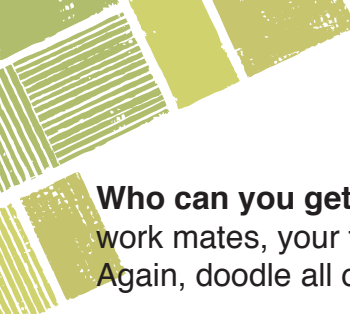

Like me, I enjoy playing boardgames

Really me? Yes. There's something you do, an interest you have, a hobby, a pastime, something that you talk about down the pub, something that you do for a living, whatever. You can use that to help Airplot stop airport expansion.

Or me, I'm a plumber

Like what? Well that's where you come in, we don't know yet. So please grab a piece of paper and scribble down all the interesting (or dull) things you do in life. Draw big bubbles around them.

Who can you get interested? Who else does these things? Probably some of your friends, your work mates, your family, or the people in WHSmiths who read the same magazines as you do. Again, doodle all over your piece of paper.

Well I know quite a lot of other plumbers.

Imagine what you could do? The sky's the limit. If there were 20 of you what could you do? Think of something big, something small and perhaps something that will make people laugh. Maybe something that would make a great picture for the local paper. Think about all your interests, not just one.

Hmmm, well I've always thought about organising a cheese tasting competition.

So... You've picked a group of people you want to approach. They're interesting as well. There's lots of scope for quirky things you could do together. You know you can talk to them about helping Airplot in your own unique way and that you can imagine turning something into a real life event.

OK so I'd like to organise a big boardgame, based on aviation.

You've got an idea and a couple people you can go to to ask for help? Now go to Starting Your Own Airplot Group - you can download this on the Airplot site at www.airplot.org.uk/toolkit.html.
